

Mayi Ndombe River

On the banks of the Mayi Ndombe River, the day began with a call to action. Thanks to the mobilisation efforts on the ground, the young people of the region responded to the call. Armed with shovels, seedlings and energy, they gathered along the riverbank.

This is a strategic location: every rainy season, the weakened soil threatens the nearby national road. Planting trees here is not just about greening the landscape, it is about protecting a vital artery for the region, preventing landslides and ensuring the safety of an entire population.

Throughout the day, the young people of Mayi Ndombe worked side by side, aware of the importance of their actions. Each tree planted represented a natural barrier against erosion and a concrete commitment to the future.

On that day, their efforts bore fruit. The riverbanks began to transform, and with them came the certainty that when young people unite around a common goal, they can protect their territory in a sustainable way.
