

Maymouna Ouattara

Let us share with you Maymouna's testimonial.

Last season, when the young plants first arrived in the village, she had no idea how much this simple gesture would change her daily life. She planted them carefully, close to her home, hoping they would take root.

Months went by, marked by rain, sunshine, and everyday tasks. Today, these plants are part of her life. In the morning, she picks a few leaves to prepare the family's sauce. It is no longer just something on the plate: it is a source of pride, security, and a small step toward independence.

As she watched the plants grow, she realized that this project went far beyond her own household. That is what encouraged her to return, from time to time, to the nursery. She helps, observes, and learns alongside the nursery workers. There, everyone knows that this work is meaningful—for families, for the land, and for the future of the village.

When she speaks about this experience, her words are simple but sincere. She knows what these plants have brought into her life, day after day. And it is with deep gratitude that she thanks Graines de Vie for this support, which has taken root in her yard... and throughout the entire community.
